“The Green City is superior”

With elections complete, huge respect should be handed towards to the city of Howard. Most candidates who ran for the State level had achieved the mecca. There is huge for Carson City day which is tomorrow. Congratulations to Howard Supreme Court Justices Kevin Meng, Kendrick Peterson, Chace Avecilla, and Troy Gingerich.

As for in the role of Attorney General, Omar Moore was elected. With his great public speaking, it is no doubt that his wicked ways of talking influenced and teased the minds of the Federalists.

Talking about party wise, many federalists may be upset that in supreme court, the nationalists actually have the majority, just because of the representation of Howard.

For Howard this is just great news to have so much representation. Delegates, this just shows that Howard has the masterminds, and the best for all. Just know, Carson City day should be very interesting just in how the elections played out today. Delegates, our experiences in boys state would be concluding soon, so make the best of it.

SPORTS

1st Osgood
 2nd Howard
 3rd Anderson
 4th Las Craigas
 5th Martie and Jaytown

I know we said that the sports scores were final in yesterday's paper, but 3 tied scores apparently didn't sit well with the staff, and that is why we had tie-breakers yesterday.

Osgood and Howard duked out on the football field to break their tie and for one city to rise victorious. Vicky was intense and with both teams performing at their best that was expected. However, with a score of 20-14 Osgood came out on top.

As the matches between Anderson and Las Craigas went on it was difficult to predict the true victor on chances alone; the volleyball match was a test of teamwork and spirit. With a continuous chanting coming from both teams the game was close, by in the end and you set out on top and received 3rd place. As for the match between Martie and Jaytown for 5th place, it ended in yet another tie!

After the tie-breaker matches occurred, the NBS staff and our nominated delegates from each side completed in an ultimate frisbee match. The staff and the delegates each and competed at their best. For a moment in the game it looked as if the delegates were catching up, but as "luck" would have it the staff were saved by the bell and with a score of 5 to 4 the staff won. Secondly, after the All-Star over the cities competed in a tug-of-war. Each city matchup was crazy as it was intense. However, no match was as intense as the championship hug of war match between the city of Anderson in the city of the city of Howard. By far this match was the longest and MOST intense. with 3 major shifts in the lead Howard ended up winning the match, thus leaving Anderson in 2nd place. Right after this incredible match the staff challenged Howard to a let's just say staff but it wasn't truly considering that all of Howard was exhausted after their previous match, but that's ok (The counselors feel good once in a while).

QUIZ BOWL

Throughout every evening at Nevada Boys' State, the delicacy looks forward to the nightly Quizbowl tournament, consisting of intense competition and daunting anticipation due to the cities' hope to be victorious. As this week comes to a close, each city was to select one nominee for the All-Star Quizbowl team, where one from each city competes against the mastermind NBS staff. This is a prestigious position due to the fact that the NBS staff has had a continuous streak of 17 years without being beaten, so the all-star team is always filled with a bit of nerves.

This year during the all-star tournament, the all-star team did lose, however only by a drooling two points. The entire event was engulfed with a feeling of tension, and every being in that auditorium was kept on the edge of their seats. For a large majority, the delegation was far in the lead; perhaps for more than $\frac{3}{4}$ of the entire duration. They were on fire as they answered almost every question quickly and confidently. Some of the staff claimed that it was the scariest Quizbowl tournament they have ever competed in, because for a minute they had believed that they would lose. But it is important to remember that the delegation was close, and it is rare to find a group of young men who have such academic talent.

Geoffrey Lawrence

As this week at Nevada Boys' state begins to approach its farewell, the final guest speaker Geoffrey Lawrence presented the NBS auditorium with a respectable and appealing presentation on his job and experience as the Director of Research and Legislative Affairs at NPRI in Nevada. He demonstrated that his job has been successful for him, as he has funded technology improvements, charter school expansions, and more. He also alleged that he is a common observer on public policy in print, radio and television news in Nevada, and that his work is frequently displayed throughout numerous publications in the state and nation. Lawrence is very accustomed throughout the state due to having developed complete suggestions for improvement of the state revenue structure, budgeting methods and spending habits.

PUBLIC SERVICE ANNOUNCEMENT: WE ARE ALL AWESOME!

So I'm sure we were all dreading these PSA's that took place tonight. Personally for me it just felt like unnecessary busy work that was just one more thing that we had to worry and stress about. One more thing to take away from our main jobs. How incredibly wrong I was.

1st - Osgood
2nd - Jaytown
3rd - Howard
4th - Anderson
5th - Las Craigas
6th - Martie

These public service announcements were amazing my fellow delegates, and staff of course! Great work. Not only was this a great opportunity for all of the delegates to give a last little look into how much chemistry they have with one another, but the amazing creativity of all of the delegates came out as well, and it was so great to see. We've all come so far since that first day. Be proud.

I just wanted to go through my personal highlights for each city as well. For Martie, I was personally a big fan of all the Middle Eastern jokes, because they were made by the Middle Eastern, and I love seeing people be able to have fun by poking fun at themselves. Then for Jaytown, the j-walking thing had me falling out of my chair. Like wow that was well played guys, loved it. Howard, when Troy got his butt slapped, wow. That's all I can say. Wow. I had tears rolling down my face. Anderson, I was a big fan of Mitchell just starting the whole epic twerking. I can see male stripper as a future career choice for you. Las Craigas, my favorite part of yours was when Nick made the joke poking fun at his failed Creed recital, I love seeing that stuff. Now finally, for Osgood, my city, I mean pretty much everything was great to be honest. No just kidding, it was honestly 90% improv, and I can confidently say that for that being true, it turned out great. It was a great idea, and the improv jokes were just amazing, none of those were planned, so I applaud my city.

This made me feel closer with all of the delegates than anything. You all are great and talented people and I'm glad I had the pleasure to meet all of you. Nevada Boys' State for life my fellow delegates and counselors, for life.

Delegates and counselors suffer third-degree burns

Although he may have lost Nick Scipione, Governor runner up, he gave probably the most entertaining speech thus far. Said speech came in the form of a poem, but this poem was special. Nick left few unscorched with his roast session, whether he was cracking jokes about other delegates or calling a counselor a "tatted up Chris Pratt". His best roast was on Sean Powers, when he called him an escaped Amish guy. While at some points he was a bit harsh it showed his ability to connect with a crowd and use humor to convey a message, except when he was reciting the Boys' State Creed, which he expresses his sincere apologies for. He brought up and proved a lot of great points in one of the best arguments of the entire week. He definitely put a lot of effort into his campaign, and really showed that anyone can accomplish something as long as they are willing to work. Although it was ultimately unsuccessful, he still deserves all the congratulations in the world.

The Fist makes History

After several years of underground activity, the First is back! The "Secret Independent Party" made its official return yesterday during the airing of campaign videos, demonstrating the rebellion against both parties. Perceived by most as a joke and a pathetic idea, those few who believed in the creation of the ultimate alliance between Nationalists and Federalists ultimately succeeded. The return of the Fist was lead by Abraham Ortiz from the city of Anderson along with the much despised Chief of Police Erick Baltazar, from the city of Howard, and negotiator Koby Aguilar from Martie, lead to one of the most successful rebellious movements in Nevada Boys' State History. The video shown showed the rebirth of the Fist giving both parties a reason to be afraid, it showed the amount of support this "joke" had with about half the delegates showing "The Fist". This left most delegates and staff surprised of how strong the third party really was. The primary goal of the Fist was to have as many members elected into office in order to dominate the state. The task was accomplished after having 5 out of their 6 candidates win their elections which also demonstrated the influence created by the Fist. The Fist is everywhere. The Fist is watching. The Fist made history. Be afraid. We are here.

Flavortown gets the Triple

Triple D has a whole new meaning as Diners Drive-ins and Dives host, Guy Fieri, is about to take on his biggest challenge yet, running for mayor of Flavortown. "I knew I was born a natural leader", Guy Fieri stated in a recent press conference, wiping crusted tabasco from his lips "To slap some dry rub on a whole hog and down the rest in barbeque is NOT what a follower does." Recently, Flavortown's crumbling economy has caused massive rioting among its soup sector, and foreclosed homes coupled with mass evictions is making the past tourist dream into an apocalyptic nightmare. When asked about what Fieri plans to do with the recent issues corrupting Flavortown he said, "Look honey, I know pulled pork, If you can't put a pig in a blanket you gotta let it simmer, and to cook a bison, you need heat, and that's something I got plenty of" pointing to his trademark "flame" shirt. During a recent visit to Flavortown Guy Fieri was noted as being "unapologetic" and "downright rude" by the local civilization. "He came to my [restaurant] and invaded my kitchen until we made him a burger" one local diner owner stated, "then he walked around patronizing my customers for 'just one bite.' It was disgusting." When asked about the incident, Fieri had this to say, "I believe they had a Jack Daniel's-handled splitting maul — light a big smoker, and barbecue a whole hog. If they'd thrown in a little ice cold beer and some Hank Williams Junior, I might not have left — ever." Fieri's lack of any political background makes him an interesting candidate, especially in light of the terrible conditions of Flavortown. While some may argue this is a bad thing, Fieri says that "all Politicians are corrupt anyway, If you vote for me, expect a triple dipple D."

Growing up in the modern world we are presented with near infinite outlets to meet all our human needs, the primary of which is food. With so many delicious delicacies our there we are naturally presented with a series of posers that try to push themselves as connoisseur of flavor. False idols like Gordon Ramsey or Bobby Flay try to be crowned kings of flavor, but one man, one god among humans has truly made a name for himself. This golden god has proved on multiple occasions that not only is he capable of finding and tasting the beefiest meals out there (see Diners Drive-ins and Dives) but every flavor filled dish touched by this golden haired Greek God is instantly made into an insatiable palate. Without this man we have no flavor. Guy Fieri not only is the unanimous Prince of Flavor town, but he feels deeper than any man could dream, he is wise beyond his lifespan, and lastly he is the kindest soul with the brightest smile this side of moms spaghetti bowl.
